'Anybody But Anne' is the fifth in the 'Fleming Stone' series of detective novels by prolific author Carolyn Wells. Life is full of moments. Moments of love. Moments of pain. And I often wondered why the moments of pain were so easily recalled, while the moments of love were fleeting and gone before I had time to truly appreciate them. It seemed I was irreparably broken. A broken girl with broken dreams. My neighbor Charlie once said, "What defines you, Madeline Moore, is how well you rise after falling." Life has knocked me down. Several times, in fact. It has shown me things I never wanted to see. I've experienced sadness and failure. I've experienced moments where I didn't want to get up. Moments where I simply lacked the strength to. And once again, Charlie's voice reminds me, "You have to rise above the storm, Madeline, in order to find sunshine."

I was 33 years old when I finally found hope in my traumatic experience of sexual abuse as a child. Up to this point in my life, I had spent years struggling with my identity and self-worth. Although these pages are geared towards teen first-person survivors - they're also for youth leaders, friends and family members of teens who have been abused. If you've ever walked alongside a loved one through the discovery and healing process but need a better understanding, this book is for you as well.
